House erected by Francis and John Wyman (brothers) in Woburn, Mass., in 1658.

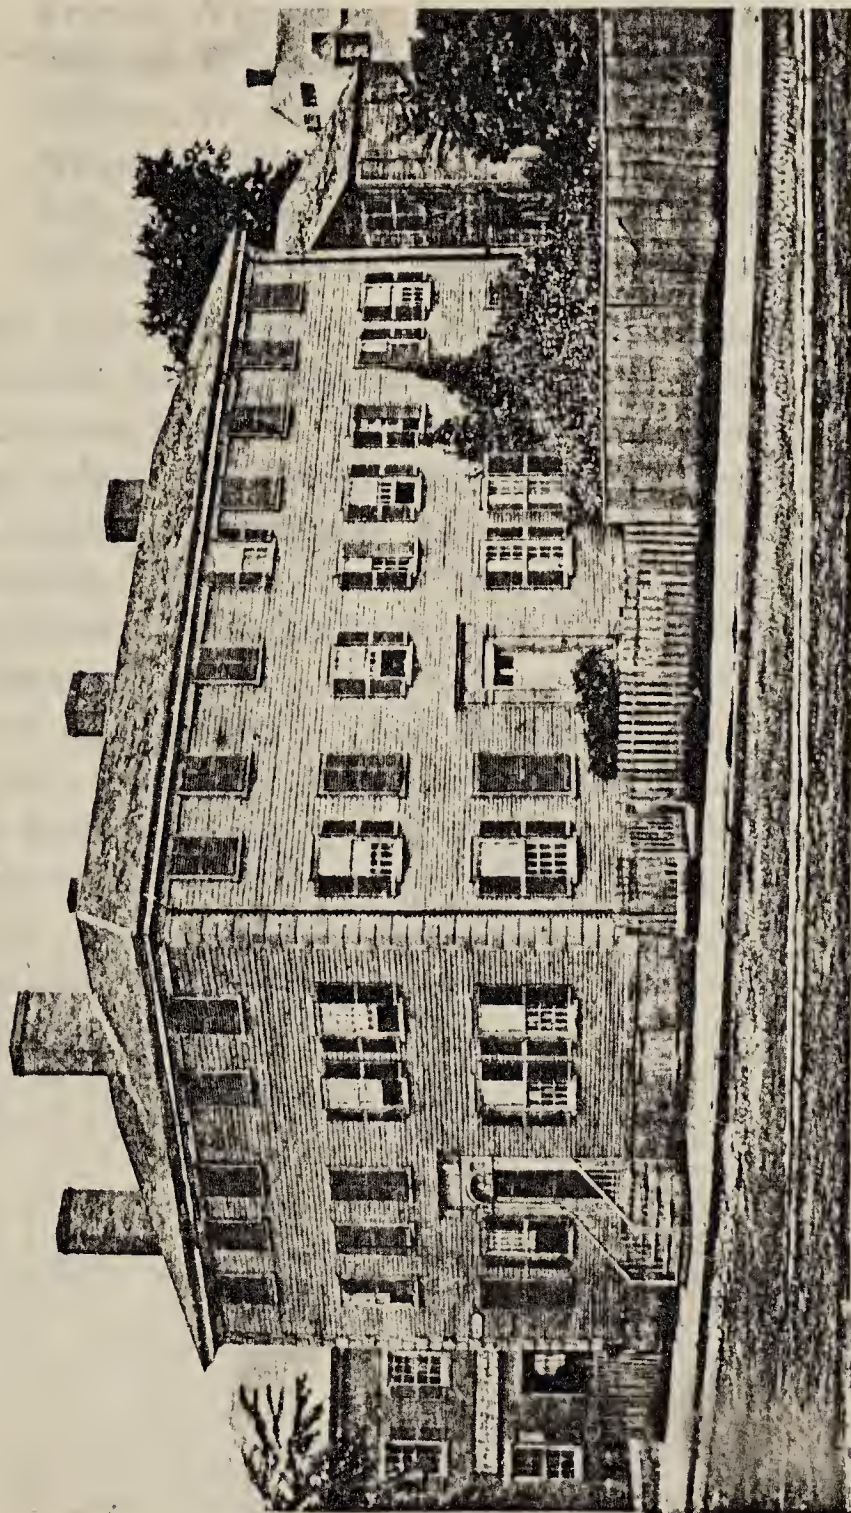

WYMAN

Col. Nehemiah Wyman was born in Bedford, Mass., February 17th, 1786. He died in Hillsboro, Ill., June 25th, 1869.

He was a descendant of the early Pilgrims, both his paternal and maternal ancestors having been among the first settlers in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay.

His father, Nehemiah Wyman, was descended from Francis Wyman, who was born in England in 1617, came to Charlestown in 1640 and in that year signed town orders. In 1642 he moved to Woburn and was one of the founders of that town.

In 1665 he bought an extensive tract of land in that part of Woburn that is now the town of Burlington. He built his homestead in Woburn in 1658, which is still standing. It is a square, two-story structure, built on the most solid foundations. The frame is of oak and the house has four rooms on a floor. The walls are pierced with loop-holes (these are still extant) for musketry to defend it from the attacks of the Indians. This house is rendered famous in history by having been the refuge of Samuel Adams and John Hancock in their flight from Lexington, when warned of the approach of the British troops at the time of that battle. Here in this ancient dwelling were born three generations of Col. Nehemiah Wyman's ancestors.

House erected by Nehemiah Wyman in Charlestown, Mass., in 1801, in which five of the seven children of Col. Nehemiah Wyman were born—
Sophia, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Mary and Isaac.

The record reads thus:

Francis Wyman born 1617, died 1699
William Wyman born 1656, died 1714
William Wyman born 1683, died 1749
Nehemiah Wyman born 1722, died 1775
Nehemiah Wyman born 1762, died 1820
Nehemiah Wyman born 1786, died 1869

Col. Nehemiah Wyman's father was a soldier of the Revolution, having enlisted in the American army at the age of seventeen years. He served under General Washington, whom he greatly admired and revered, and related many anecdotes of him when speaking of his campaigns. He was present at the siege and surrender of Yorktown. His family mansion was built by him in Charlestown in the year of 1801 at the foot of Bunker Hill on Main Street. The lot occupies about three quarters of an acre, the house measuring sixty feet on Main Street and eighty feet on Bunker Hill Street. It is a three-story wooden house built in the most thorough manner, the halls and rooms being finished with high dados with wainscoting and mantles in carved wood.

He died in 1820.

House erected by Col. Nehemiah Wyman in Hillsboro, Ill., in 1841.

STEARNS

Col. Nehemiah Wyman's mother's maiden name was Susannah Stearns. She was the daughter of Capt. Edward Stearns of Bedford and was a lineal descendant of Isaac Stearns who came over from England in the same ship with Governor Winthrop and Sir Richard Saltonstall in 1630. He settled in Watertown, where he built his homestead which was standing until a few years ago. The family name was variously spelt Sterne, Sternes, Stearnes. In the old homestead at Watertown was found the family Coat of Arms, which is identical with that of Richard Sterne, Archbishop of York and also of Laurence Sterne, author of "Tristram Shandy." He was born in England.

The records of the Colony read as follows:

Isaac Stearnes, born in England, died 1671
John Stearnes, born in England, died 1668
John Stearnes.....born 1654, died 1728
John Stearnes.....born 1686, died 1776
Edward Stearnes...born 1726, died 1793
Susannah Stearnes...born 1762, died 1847

The first John Stearns settled in Billerica, where most of his descendants continued to reside down to Edward, who settled in Bedford, and there bought his farm. His homestead is still in existence and is approached by a grand avenue lined on either side with rows of stately oak and elm trees, planted by his own hands.

The family of Stearns was a prominent one in the Colony, several of its members having been graduates of Harvard University, among whom for successive generations were many divines, distinguished for their piety and learning. These comprised scholars and professors noted for their attainments in ancient and modern languages and in classical lore. The professions of medicine, law and science have also been ably represented.

Capt. Edward Stearns, grandfather of Col. N. Wyman, took an active part in the Revolution. At Concord fight he was Lieutenant of the Bedford Company and his Captain, who was his brother-in-law, being killed, the command devolved upon Lieut. Stearns. It is related that when the British soldiers crossed Concord Bridge, they tore up the planking to prevent the advance of the Patriot forces. Capt. Stearns, nothing daunted, on reaching the bridge, marched his company over the string timbers in hot pursuit, and did good service throughout the day. His daughter, Susannah, mother of Col. N. Wyman, often related an incident of "the time that tried men's souls." Her father, during the siege of Boston, in which he served, on one occasion when the army was suffering for provisions, went home to his farm, harnessed up his wagon, and loaded it with all sorts of produce, among which were two immense cheeses freshly made. His wife, as he brought them from the storehouse, said to him, "Do let us weigh these cheeses, I should like to know how heavy they are." He replied, "How can you think of delaying me one moment when the soldiers are starving? I cannot wait even for that."

MORTON

Doctor Nathaniel Morton was born in Bridgewater, Mass., June 25th, 1758. He died in Halifax, Mass., September 16th, 1829. He was a descendant of the early Pilgrims. Both his paternal and maternal ancestors were among the early settlers in the Colony of New Plymouth. George Morton, the first of our ancestors to emigrate to America, was born in England and married a sister of Gov. William Bradford. He came to Plymouth in the Ship Ann, August, 1623, and died in 1624. George Morton brought with him his son Nathaniel, afterwards the Secretary and Historian of the Colony, and four other children.

The record reads thus:

Geo. Morton, born in England, died 1624
John Morton.....born 1616
John Morton.....born 1650
Nathaniel Morton.....
Nathaniel Morton..born 1758, died 1829
Charles Morton....born 1810, died 1851
Nathaniel Morton.....born 1842
Isaac W. Morton.....born 1847

George Morton took great interest in the success of the Plymouth Colony, identifying himself with it, and in whom they reposed such entire confidence as to send to him their first dispatches of letters and journals. "He is represented in the 'Memorial' as very faithful in whatsoever public employment was intrusted to him and an unfeigned well wisher and promoter of the common good and growth of the Colony.”

His descendants inherited many of his sterling qualities, a keen high sense of honor and justice being prominent among them.

The foundation of it was the charitable act of persons who lived at a very remote period, but in the year 1390 in the reign of King Richard II, it received so large a benefaction from Robert Morton, then the head of that eminent family, that it was considered as founded anew and the Mortons were afterwards looked upon as the founders and the Chapel became the family burying place. The circumstances of their benefaction were these—The Canons of the House of St. Oswald or Nostel near Pontefract, had fallen into great pecuniary difficulties under Adam de Bilton, an improvident Prior, and to relieve themselves from the temporary pressure, they borrowed money on annuities. Morton advanced to them the sum of 250 pounds, for which the Convent agreed to pay eight Marks per annum to the Chaplain of the Bawtry Hos-

“George Morton, Elkana Watson, and Samuel Lucas were the three original grantees of Clarks Island where the exploring party of the Pilgrims rested on the Sabbath day.”

“In the late edition of Russell, Mrs. George Morton’s death is recorded. At her death she is the widow of Manasseh Kempton, aged 81—the date of her death is February 19th, 1664 or 5, which places her birth about 1583, and the birth of her husband the first George Morton, probably not far from 1580, making him about 32 years old at the time of his marriage” a “Merchant from York in England.”

Notes from ancient Landmarks of Plymouth by William T. Davis:

“In August 1671, John Morton, son of John Morton of Middleborough and nephew of Secretary Nathaniel Morton, who was born and had been reared in the Colony, repeated an offer previously made to “erect and keep a school for the teaching of the children and youth of the town to read and write and cost accounts.” On the 20th of May 1672, the town “did agree and unanimously vote and conclude that their lands at Tipican and Agawam, and places adjacent the profits and benefits thereof shall be improved and employed for and towards the maintenance of “a free school, now begun or erected at Plymouth; and that the profits and benefits thereof shall no way be estranged from the said use, so long as there shall be occasion to use it for that end, and in that behalf.” “After a short term of service, Mr. Morton was succeeded by Ammi Ruhamah Corlet, who was a graduate of Harvard in the class of 1670. This school first taught by Mr. Morton, though in later years partly supported by a price of tuition, is believed to have been the first absolutely free public school established in New England.”

Notes from history of Plymouth by Wm T. Davis:

In list of passengers on the Ship Sun which came over in August, 1623, were George Morton, Patience Morton, Nathaniel Morton, John Morton, Sarah Morton, Epharim Morton, George Morton, Jr., and Thomas Morton, Jr. George Morton brought with him six children.

Thomas Morton, Jr., was the son of Thomas Morton who came in the Ship Fortune 1621, November 9th.

Nathaniel Morton, son of George Morton was the Secretary of the Colony. The first Secretary being Nathaniel Souther.

Nathaniel Morton was 10 years old when he came over in 1623, was chosen Secretary in 1645 and served until his death in 1685. He married Lydia Cooper in 1635. His children were "Remember," "Mercy," "Lydia," "Elizabeth," "Joanna," "Hanna," "Eleaser," "Nathaniel." His sons died unmarried, so he left no descendants bearing his name. His brothers John and Epharim had children and their descendants are scattered all over New England.

Nathaniel Morton, son of George Morton, was 12 years old when his father died. In 1645 he was chosen Secretary of the Colony Court and continued in that office till death, June 28th, 1685, in his 73rd year. His residence in Plymouth was by the side of Wollingsly Brook, half a mile south of the village. He has left many historical writings and published a book entitled "New England's Memorial." This work was printed at Cambridge in 1669, in a small quarto volume of 198 pages. The greater part of his information was borrowed, he informs us, from his much honored Uncle, Gov. William Bradford, and such manuscripts as he left in his study.

In English history we find the name associated with honorable positions. Macaulay speaks of Judge Morton as being a very upright man. In the year 1670 Claude Duval, the French page of the Duke of Richmond, a noted highwayman, was seized and the King (Charles the Second) would have granted him a pardon but for the interference of Judge Morton, the terror of highwaymen, who threatened to resign his office unless the law was carried into full effect.

Doctor Nathaniel Morton married Joanna Thompson in Halifax, Mass., 1790. She was a direct descendant of John Thomson (150 years after spelled Thompson), born in the north of Wales in 1616, came to Plymouth in May, 1622, built his first house in what is now Halifax, where he lived until it was burned by the Indians. In 1677 he built a frame house near the same spot. In this house lived five generations of his descendants. It was taken down in 1838, having been inhabited about 150 years. Many of his descendants still live in this locality.

Doctor Nathaniel Morton lived in the old homestead in Halifax and where all his children were born until the year 1820, when it was torn down and rebuilt on the old site. The house is now occupied by one of his descendants.

CLIFFORD

The Clifford family originally settled, in the early days of this country, in the vicinity of Bangor, Maine, where they became quite prominent, many of the men being lawyers of note.

Samuel Clifford, born about 1775, a direct descendant from these Cliffords, eventually settled at Brookfield, Vermont, and spent his life teaching schools in that State and also in the State of New Hampshire.

He was married twice, having four sons and one daughter from his first wife and one son from his second wife.

His first wife was a Hamblin, her mother being a Cleveland, a direct descendant from the same family as our President, Grover Cleveland.

THEIR FIVE CHILDREN WERE:

Elijah, married twice but left no descendants. He late in life moved to Alton, Illinois, with his second wife and died there past eighty years of age.

Oliver Hamblin Clifford, born in Brookfield, Vermont, on January 18, 1809. He married Elizabeth Mason in 1838, and died in Medfield, Massachusetts, June 8, 1893. His wife, a descendant on both sides from the early settlers of Massachusetts, was born in Princeton, Massachusetts, January 20, 1816, and died in Medfield, Massachusetts, November 17, 1901.

Samuel Clifford never married and died in Portland, Oregon, well past eighty years of age.

Lorraine Clifford married, but likewise left no descendants.

Israel Clifford, a son by second marriage and much younger than his brothers and sister, died in Dorchester, Massachusetts, in 1923, at age of eighty-six. He left a son and daughter who are still living, but have no children.

THE CHILDREN OF OLIVER HAMBLIN CLIFFORD AND ELIZABETH MASON

These two settled in East Medway, Massachusetts, now a part of Millis, Massachusetts, where they purchased a farm on which was a substantial brick house, built about 1825. The house is still standing (1927) and is in as good a shape as ever, showing how well homes were built in those days. In this house all four of their children were born as follows:

Joseph Clark Clifford, born September 14, 1839, died November 14, 1890. He served through the Civil War and at the end of the war entered the Regular Army of the United States and was Captain of Ordnance at his death. He is buried in Arlington Cemetery. In 1865 he married Mary Elizabeth Condit. She was born in 1840 and died in Worcester, Massachusetts, March 30, 1926.

Alfred Clifford, born February 11, 1845. He served as a private in the last year of the Civil War, being stationed with the troops that were guarding our Capitol, Washington, D. C. After the war he went west to see the country, and in 1866 drove a cattle train from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to Denver, Colorado, and return. He spent a short time in Chicago, Illinois, St. Louis, Missouri, La Cross, Wisconsin, and eventually in 1869 settled in St. Louis, Missouri, where he devoted most of his life to the manufacture of steel wire products. He was among the first to manufacture such products west of the Mississippi River and also one of the first manufacturers of barbed wire in the country. On November 20, 1877, he married Mary Frances Morton. She died July 9, 1890. On April 3, 1893, he married Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson Anderson.

Ellen Clifford, born March 7, 1846, died in Medfield, Massachusetts, in Fall of 1919. She never married, but devoted the early part of her life to teaching school, and to raising the only child of her younger sister (who died at age of 29) and finally to taking care of her aged parents.

Sarah Elizabeth Clifford, born May 1, 1854, died December 13, 1883. In 1880 she married George F. Mitchell, and they had one child, Harold C. Mitchell, born in 1881, still living. He is married but has no children.
